AUTHOR'S NOTE

"The Green Pastures" is an attempt to present certain aspects of a living religion in the terms of its believers. The religion is that of thousands of Negroes in the deep South. With terrific spiritual hunger and the greatest humility, these untutored black Christians—many of whom cannot even read the book which is the treasure house of their faith—have adapted the contents of the Bible to the consistencies of their everyday lives.

One need not blame a hazy memory of the Bible for the failure to recall the characters of Hezdrel, Zeba and others in the play. They are the author's apocrypha, but he believes persons much like them have figured in the meditations of some of the old Negro preachers, whose simple faith he has tried to translate into a play.

Sonata in A (K.331) - - - - - Mozart
Andante grazioso
Menuetto
Alla Turca : Allegretto

The most ardent admirer of Mozart's music has been known to confess that he finds the Piano Sonatas, taken as a whole, less interesting than those for violin and piano, perhaps disappointing when we think of the magnificent series of Piano Concertos. But there are so many glorious exceptions that we can only marvel at his versatility. Those in a minor key come most readily to mind, but the A major Sonata is also an established favourite. If at first sight it seems no more than a pleasant, conventional work, closer acquaintance cannot but endear it to us: the warm-hearted theme of the first movement and the Trio of the Minuet alone are worth their weight in gold.

Oddly enough not one of the movements is in sonata-form. The opening Andante is a set of variations on a Siciliana-like theme of such rare simplicity and tenderness that it must surely sound familiar even on a first hearing. The six variations follow its outline faithfully, though the third strikes a more plaintive note in the minor key and No. 5 magnifies the theme in a slower tempo to the proportions of a richly ornate aria. The high spirits of the final variation overflow into a few extra bars of coda. All goes accordingly to plan in the gracious Menuetto which follows, but the wonderful Trio has delightful surprises in modulation and phrase-length, and its long melodic line seems never-ending. The Rondo alla Turca needs no comment, having acquired fame as a virtuoso-piece for the harpsichord. Its texture is as perfectly suited to the older instrument as that of the previous movements is to the newer, and as in Mozart's day the Sonata might have been played on either instrument it is fitting that the two keyboard styles should be so happily blended within the same work.

Sonata in C sharp minor, Op. 27, No. 2 ("Moonlight") - - - - - Beethoven
Adagio sostenuto
Allegretto
Presto agitato

By a law of nature, works which are over-popular in one generation tend to be slighted by the next. Such has been the fate of the "Moonlight" and it is high time we freed ourselves from all possible prejudice, forgot the chocolate-box pictures of the Adonis at the piano and discovered the work afresh. Abolish too the title if it gives pain: it was not Beethoven's, but do not let this mislead us into thinking that he was such an "absolute" musician as to deny the existence of a programmatic background to his sonatas. He once contemplated publishing a series of commentaries disclosing the source of his inspirations, but in the present case went no further in print than quasi una fantasia.

The sequence of the three movements with their widely differing moods gives a dramatic unity to the work : each, too, is remarkably concise, maintaining its own particular mood throughout, the conventional contrast of subjects having no place in the scheme. The famous first movement shows how Beethoven, even early Beethoven, understood the magic singing qualities of the piano and its power of sustaining a slow, restrained melodic line, but notice also that it is in strict sonata-form with development and coda, the whole bound together by the quiet triplet accompaniment figure. The second movement, a descendent of the Minuet, is by no means the trivial piece some would have it to be, though it brings relief with the major key : there is a restlessness and sense of foreboding in its syncopations. In the Finale the storm breaks, its urgent purpose demanding the use of sonata-form with its greater dramatic possibilities than the more usual rondo-form. Here, too, the passionate second subject brings no respite, dominating the working-out section and building up a tremendous climax in the coda.

Sonata in B flat minor, Op. 35 (" Funeral March ")

- - - - - Chopin

Grave—Doppio movimento

Scherzo—Più lento

Marche funèbre : Lento

Finale : Presto

Chopin's wonderful improvisatory style and his strong national feeling found perfect expression in the Polonaise and the Mazurka, but he made other forms equally his own and was unique among the nineteenth-century virtuoso-composers in having a highly original sense of form and harmony. Even his Studies are primarily works of art. One would hardly expect him to be at his happiest when he imposed classical sonata-form on his natural flow of ideas, yet his two greatest sonatas show no hampering of his inspiration. In fact they are the most widely-loved works of their kind since Beethoven.

The first movement of the B flat minor Sonata is dramatic and concise, beginning with a bold introductory gesture which discloses the composer's identity without doubt. After this the movement proceeds without further interruption, the two main subjects, agitated and lyrical, alternating abruptly and without lengthy transition. The Scherzo is equally compact in form, but its spacious middle section is not to be hurried and the poet has the last word after the return of the vigorous opening. The famous Funeral March has suffered cruelly at the hands of brass bands and, like all Chopin's music, becomes at once nobler and more moving in its original form. To find the right Finale to follow was no easy task. Chopin was justified in breaking from tradition, though opinions may still vary as to the success of his experiment. Imagine, if you will, the devastating effect of any normal, conventional Finale at this point, and contrast Chopin's brief moto perpetuo of mysterious rushing quavers. The punctuality of its final chord gives us a feeling of completeness which no long-windedness could have achieved.

Albumblätter (from "Bunte Blätter" Op. 99) - - - - - Schumann

Bunte Blätter is a collection of fourteen pieces, five of which form a set of their own under the title Albumblätter. The composition of these fragments cover a wide period of years, yet there is a feeling of unity about the Albumblätter which distinguishes them from their neighbours. They are intensely personal meditations, typical of the great Romantic who once professed that he never wrote with a view to public performance. Brahms took the first as the subject of his Variations, Op. 9, and based one of the variations on the mysterious, agitated figuration of the second. In the third Schumann, as though from a different world, dreams of Carnaval—the thematic connection will be noted. The fourth and fifth, in E flat minor and major respectively, maintain this mood of quiet reflection, the former with its poignant minor ninths while in the latter once again "the poet speaks."

Carnaval, Op. 9 - - - - - Schumann

For Schumann's own intimate circle of friends Carnaval was full of subtle literary associations. Fanciful references to persons and places in the form of musical letters lose their significance in time where the music is strong enough to stand on its own merit and Schumann himself discredited them at a later date. His own sub-title, Scènes mignonnes sur quatre notes, is a clue to the fact that many of the episodes are variations of the freest kind, and musical sleuths are provided with a starting-point in the unplayed Sphinxes which sets out the magic letters in breves and links Schumann's name with the town of Asch, wherein dwelt a certain lady.

There are twenty episodes in all, the first and last providing the substantial framework for the remainder. The Préambule calls us to attention, gradually increasing in tempo from quasi maestoso to presto. Pierrot, Arlequin and Valse noble explain themselves, each turning the four-note figure (A—E flat—C—B, or in German notation A—Es—C—H) to its own purpose. Eusebius, with its delicate septolets, and the impetuous Florestan were two of Schumann's journalistic noms-de plume. Coquette is completed by the short Réplique, after which for no apparent reason the Sphinxes are formally written out. Next comes the breathless Papillons followed by a quick waltz, A.S.C.H.—S.C.H.A., lettres dansantes, and a slower, passionate one, Chiarina, representing Clara Wieck. Two more portraits, Chopin and Estrella (of Asch) lead to Reconnaissance with its inner repeated notes. Pantalon et Colombine appear as contrasted characters within the same piece while Valse allemande is interrupted by a display of fireworks from Paganini. Aveu, hovering tenderly between F minor and A flat, Promenade, a more elaborate conversation-piece in waltz-time, and Pause are the remaining episodes, the last-named leading straight into the final Marche des Davidsbündler contre les Philistins. Schumann and his progressive friends had adopted the title of Davidites in their literary warfare against musical pedants, the latter appearing in this finale disguised as a pompous seventeenth-century dance on the pianistic trombones. As the pace quickens, more and more themes from the Préambule are called in, until at the end, in Tovey's words, "the heads of twelve Goliaths fly through the air like twelve turnips" and the victory of the Davidsbündler is assured.

"THE POISONED KISS"

or

The Empress and the Necromancer.

Libretto by Evelyn Sharp. Music by Ralph Vaughan Williams.

The Poisoned Kiss is described as a 'romantic extravaganza'. It is really a farce with music, of an unconventional kind. The libretto, by Evelyn Sharp, is founded on incidents taken from "The Poison Maid" (a story in 'The Twilight of the Gods' by Richard Garnett) and from "Rapaccini's Daughter" (a story in 'Mosses from an Old Manse' by Nathaniel Hawthorne).

Act I

The story of the Opera begins in the forest haunt of the Magician, Dipsacus. Prince Amaryllus, disguised as a goatherd, falls in love with Tormentilla, the Magician's daughter, but makes a bad start by killing her pet cobra. The Prince's servant, Gallanthus, also falls in love with Angelica, Tormentilla's maid and companion. Dipsacus tells his daughter of his plot of revenge against the Empress, who has thwarted his love and now sets herself up as a rival magician. It appears that Dipsacus has brought up his daughter on poisons so that the first man she kisses will die. The first man, of course, is to be Amaryllus, the son of the Empress.

Act II

The Empress has heard of her son's infatuation and sends three mediums to Tormentilla with a box of poisoned chocolates. Meanwhile the lovers meet, Tormentilla gives Amaryllus (who she believes to be a goatherd) the 'poisoned kiss'. As the Empress has fed her son on antidotes, the result is that the Prince loses consciousness.

Act III

In a room in the Royal Palace, the three mediums are seen practising their mystic rituals. Despairing over the condition of her son, the Empress gazes into the crystal and the necromancer's plot is revealed. She immediately puts a counter-spell into action. The two spells neutralise each other and it is discovered that the only cure is for the Prince to marry Tormentilla. The parents relent and all ends happily in the approved fairy-story fashion, everyone expressing his joy to a rollicking hornpipe.

POISONED
KISS

R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS

These performances have been specially arranged as a tribute to the Composer in the year of his Seventy-fifth birthday.

On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday,
15th, 16th and 17th July, 1947 at 7 p.m.

Conductor : MYERS FOGGIN

Producer : DOROTHY PATTINSON

"THE POISONED KISS"

or

The Empress and the Necromancer.

Libretto by Evelyn Sharp. Music by Ralph Vaughan Williams.

The Poisoned Kiss is described as a 'romantic extravaganza'. It is really a farce with music, of an unconventional kind. The libretto, by Evelyn Sharp, is founded on incidents taken from "The Poison Maid" (a story in 'The Twilight of the Gods' by Richard Garnett) and from "Rapaccini's Daughter" (a story in 'Mosses from an Old Manse' by Nathaniel Hawthorne).

Act I

The story of the Opera begins in the forest haunt of the Magician, Dipsacus. Prince Amaryllus, disguised as a goatherd, falls in love with Tormentilla, the Magician's daughter, but makes a bad start by killing her pet cobra. The Prince's servant, Gallanthus, also falls in love with Angelica, Tormentilla's maid and companion. Dipsacus tells his daughter of his plot of revenge against the Empress, who has thwarted his love and now sets herself up as a rival magician. It appears that Dipsacus has brought up his daughter on poisons so that the first man she kisses will die. The first man, of course, is to be Amaryllus, the son of the Empress.

Act II

The Empress has heard of her son's infatuation and sends three mediums to Tormentilla with a box of poisoned chocolates. Meanwhile the lovers meet, Tormentilla gives Amaryllus (who she believes to be a goatherd) the 'poisoned kiss'. As the Empress has fed her son on antidotes, the result is that the Prince loses consciousness.

Act III

In a room in the Royal Palace, the three mediums are seen practising their mystic rituals. Despairing over the condition of her son, the Empress gazes into the crystal and the necromancer's plot is revealed. She immediately puts a counter-spell into action. The two spells neutralise each other and it is discovered that the only cure is for the Prince to marry Tormentilla. The parents relent and all ends happily in the approved fairy-story fashion, everyone expressing his joy to a rollicking hornpipe.
